The History of The Causeway Hotel

Construction on the Causeway Hotel began in 1836 by Miss Elizabeth Henry. It became the first place for travellers to stay overlooking the famous stones of the Giant's Causeway.

In 1841 the main part of the hotel we know and love today, was built. Sadly, Miss Henry died before seeing her vision come to full fruition.

In 1844 the hotel was leased to William McNaul who pledged,
"By diligence and attention to do all in my power to promote the comfort of my guests, and they may depend on my always keeping a well-stocked larder and being well supplied with the choicest wine and liquors."

This timeless pledge remains steadfast by the hotel's current management, 177 years later.

In 1887 the hotel came into the hands of the famous Traill brothers, founders of the Causeway Tram. This industrious pair built a station in the grounds of the increasingly popular hotel.

The Causeway Hotel housed its own guides who took countless guests down to savour the magical and mythical sights of the Giants Causeway.

In the mid 1800s a one week stay in the hotel could set you back a lofty £200 a week. Guests were charged extra for servants, use of the sitting room and lighting the fire!

The last private proprietors of the Causeway Hotel were the Armstrong family, who sold it to the National Trust in 2001.

HMS UK & Ireland are its current operators and make this additional pledge to valued visitors and guests, "We promise you a unique experience in a mythical place where every moment is special and lifelong memories are harvested."
